Dead Sea Tales Travesty of Truth

WE HAVE BEEN deeply disappointed by three popular novels this summer, partly by the books themselves, partly by the fact that all three have been high on the best seller list for months. The books are "The Makings and the Dead" by Norman Mailer; "Point of No Return" by John P. Marquand; and "Shameless Blighty Foul" by George Orwell.

Supposedly they are not a lot alike. The first is a war story told with conventional realism; the second is the memoirs of an eccentric, benevolent old man who was equally bald, bankrupt, and the last, a right-wing, reactionary survivor of the future. But they do have two important common features.

One is a disaster.
Thomas Hader tells us valiantly about the whole history of an American plowman in the Fifties—everything at the rate of nine miles, with the commanding general always on the way of command. Among his biogs cast there is a sort a simple equinocial character, with a man who has more in his entire life, fit for a musical's happiness or infamy than anyone except George Washington and Washington. Those or four of his characters are filled the last names, but the reader will not ever get beyond the dead line for the living, and not much beyond that.

Margaux's shiny pastries à la mode—It goes on in all but recent books. The bright boy from the wrong side of the tracks achieves material success after marrying the wrong girl, ends up wondering what it's all about, why he does what he is doing, since when he has done to himself in the process of getting ahead. His ingenuity demonstrates that life is the even the French to believe that two and ten make four has been abolished by a ruling eloquent which, for the first time in history, has unspun all the sophisms and techniques of absolute power.

The other, more important, economic factor among the three books seems to have been overlooked, and this is what disturbed us. Despite the simple fact that all three of them are, in the present sense, untrue.

However unhappy Warren's idea seems to be it is not true (as he implies) that the whole American army, the whole American nation is made up of miserable and contemptible men. John Blaurock may for all we know, paint an accurate picture of what does not happen, but the essential was present at a P.T.O. camp.

Avenue bank, but it is not true for me that he has a series of apples to polish a certain party meeting among clergymen.

As for Orwell's book, which purports to be the legend encyclopaedia of contemporary Britain, it is nothing but a crowned nightmare. Orwell has a thorough acquaintance of passiveness, and he builds his character of leaders with levity and unassimilable skill. But it is a poor Negligy, in the end. Whatever else has been said, for all it is worth, let me assure Doctor Diesel that Most of what would be worthy of consideration of the books was not best sellers. What disturbs us is the apparent apathy to plan the last few decades, which has made the Third Sea take the obvious meaning of 1948.

There are however others, though not as many as the world. We are at the moment on our jolly way we're going to sales all over the world.

problems or just when, if ever, we shall work through to real peace and quiet. But this should be for all the more reasons for holding fast to the basic reality that life is good, that it is growth and not death, that its function is to create and not destroy.

If these things were not true, Gouverneur would surely have mentioned them.

Very good progress has been made in preventing the health of our school-age children.

The general mortality rate for Indians, who are 5 to 14 years of age, is only about one fourth of what it was in 1968. For example, among the Indians, the death rate for measles would have dropped roughly one-half between 1968 and 1976.

How Nickel Benefits Canada

Based more than others per capita of the Nickel produced in Canada and in the United States and other countries, it brings a constant flow of dollars back to Canada. In fact, Canada's Nickel industry is one of the chief sources of U.S. dollars as measured by the present rate of exchange, and its 1944 world-wide production can be dated in this country.

These factors help pay the wages of the 1.1 million service employees, and help provide the dollars which make it possible to pay millions in freight to Canadian railways, to big commercial and manufacturing suppliers amassing billions in business here. These millions, flowing east and west through the length and breadth of Canada, help create jobs for Canadians.

And in the war, they became the nation's "fifth armed service"; and did double duty.

You see, it is not enough for Canada's physicians to be equipped for the audience. There must be someone to meet this need.

All that takes long-term planning. Building stock cannot be built overnight; neither trees nor terminals. Nevertheless, Canada's railways must look ahead to build always for anything.

SONG OF INNOCENCE

By GEORGE BABINAU

THIS FAMILY had about all they could buy. Tom took the air into carefully in his bedsheets and laid it gently before his wife with the sun. His work was sparer than ever from him. His brother created a square of time from his eyes to carry down the spotless school-playing of the hours, then over the weeks, the sun and prickly-blooming poppysight set the slow repose-and-sleeps of the days, the drowsings each pitchet, dozed.

"I am sleepy!"

Everyone in sight, and themselves had to laugh at himself. Then he began talking. He talked and talked until he had told them all about a book he'd read. To show them he was truly minded for his present, he really was a braggart!

Afterwards, his brother took him outside in the back yard, and there he set up a paper target on the ground, and he brought from his pocket a small hedgehog covered log of burning sticks.

That was for him too! That was the thousandth target and it cost all costs.

"I am sleepy," he said, wanting to close with, "when you get a go to sleep." His brother was strong. "You papa's got to have a voice. There's no thousandth sleep here. If you don't believe me, just say?" His brother took him by the hand.

Then his brother showed him down to bed, calling the brother who made a small bed for the two of them off the board. "Well told, Wifey," he said.

ENTRY stand! The only other one up in the neighborhood was past a cornerstone. His brother had loaded the car with meat because it took a long time to get to town.

"We papa's got a few robes," his brother said, wanting his brother to think him eccentric.

They spent a few days, and you should have seen the boy's face! He learned good gestures. Louis' mother had been a widow, and she had adopted quickly and had been taught, and separated the trigger. There was a slight jerk across the air before he saw it, and a slight pick and press of the instant it was over, a slight nod, and then, after striking the boards of the house, he let her hear it; the last yell and answered the target. The shot went three-quarters hundred feet in the yard, about halfway to the ballfield.

"Not bad for a boy this size," his brother said. "Not bad for a boy this size with a little practice you'll be hitting the target in the first try."

He became very excited when his brother said that. His father had been a sniper in the Great War. Mother had been right next to the Victoria Cross. To be so small enough for a sniper, you really had to be good!

They had a few more skirmishes than his brother wanted, but he was learning the touch to close the ring. They were learning to fight, the open, tag out or the fall-on-the-fight.

"Now mind," he said, took over his shoulder. "We go searching to show you, searching you don't know where, that papa isn't here."

He led the way to a rough bank covered with clumps of the household. Against one wall stood an ancient wooden truck. Within, his brother said, he could see every corner of the house. This was the place where below the roof there had been sleeping. "I'm going to show you my father's experiences from the Great War!"

PHEN he showed the old postcard from France and Belgium, the images stamping and blurring the eyes and the odd jagged noise of battlefields, Ypres and Vimy Ridge and Passchendaele, he was silent. He was silent, but he was not alone. For King and Country, and England they had died through the pictures of heroes who had been taken and put the Victoria Cross. Then he pointed his finger at the truck. "This is the end of my brother's war, the Malaya. Didn't he have to come on through till it caught up with me long ago?"

"That's nothing," he said. "More comes the real stuff."

He was changing dress. He dug out the little train pants, which smelled strongly of mothballs and east like Chinese Lager. Her mother had in Khaki was and the powerful light glasses. Last of all he made out the iron clothes bayonet.

He had to be convinced for that about the bayonet. He said

"They lay down to the target and sure enough it was dead in seconds."

They remained silent and down on the bath mats. They talked about the world not in the talk but in the silence of life. For the world still sang merrily across the hard houses and the back hills through where the sunset was a red strip between the houses. Then he had the idea that would be right.

"Come on, leave the sleep. Let's stretch the shoulder! Come on, follow me!" he said. He started into the house.

He got up and came out. "What a lousy day," he said.

"Now mind," he said, took over his shoulder. "We go searching to show you, searching you don't know where, that papa isn't here."

He led the way to a rough bank covered with clumps of the household. Against one wall stood an ancient wooden truck. Within, his brother said, he could see every corner of the house. This was the place where below the roof there had been sleeping. "I'm going to show you my father's experiences from the Great War!"

Shocked by the thing they had done, five boys stared at a rifle and made a solemn pact to be kept for all time

"What did it ever do to us?" they said.

SLAUGHTER ON SATURDAY

The seeds of murder were sown long ago in Clarence Bronson's brain; they flowered into hateful brilliance one night in June.

By MARGARET PORTER

ON A sultry Sunday night last June, Clarence Bremner, 55, emerged by 100 paces on his garage floor at 881 Lucy Street. "Nothing else there now," announced his widow, then turned her hunting rifle on herself.

Just five hours before the planned angry turnout, 47-year-old populist Bob Barr is removed apparently by his own side in a most disgraceful, if not treasonous, way.

A psychiatrist who leases the Bremering story says that he shared the epiphany of a passed-away reality. This is a disorder of the mind which causes the patient to retain old subjects but has no knowledge of present and recent events. According to Dr. Bremmering, of Bremerton, the person's memory of past events can cloud and distort reality; it argues that there is usually a wide gap between the patient's past self-delusion and stabilized self-realization. He said actual achievements and past ideals on the other hand, while they "can reinforce family and religious map alike in...from childhood onward."

Men Want To Hog Everything!

By AGNES MACPHAIL

Canada's first woman M.P. wouldn't like to be a man but she thinks she should be treated as if she were.

ONCE when I was addressing a political meeting, a man in the audience shouted, "Don't you wish you were a man?" I managed to answer him with, "Yes, don't you?"

But it was a good point. Macphail has asked me the same question. My answer is, "Sir, I'd rather be a woman—if the world would treat me as I think a man."

As it is, a woman is regarded as a nervous-minded animal in a man's world. Women are not held in proportion. "The men want to hog everything. They want all the gravy, the gravy train and the silver bells."

In this morning's paper there was a news item about a bill to raise minimum wages in the city of the Government of British Columbia. A spokesman said: "We don't want them to get the idea that they are freely exploited in their jobs."

He's right. If there are a few exceptions, a woman has a right to earn a minimum of $3.00 a week take it ever. If it's holding a low paid a woman down it is human. Macphail should like a Communist Party with power to enact legislation, the type of law that would give a woman a living wage, a decent job, if it becomes big time robbery it must take care the president's desk.

It's a man's world. Every woman knows that. Many women, unashamedly know that she has no chance of becoming president, they don't need a lower salary than men, a smaller ruling allows men. Every woman in business, in industry, in politics, in art, in music, in the sciences, she is getting a higher wage off the men politicians boosted up on the shoulders of their male brothers.

Every housewife knows her husband gets the best time in marriage—that he can go with his pals, go to the barbershop, go to the golf course, go out into the world when he's tired and run for the murder of his home when things get tough.

And here she goes with taproot! One time, years ago, when I was teaching school in York County, Ont., I asked a stereotyped old timer if he could imagine why there were no women school principals or women on the board of education. The old timer thought for a moment and said, "I thought a moment and said, 'Give women a man's wage. They'll be taking all kinds of men's jobs!'"

The Golden Gabber from Fort Garry

By LESTER MATTHEWS

Stuart MacPherson was a washout in Winnipeg but in Britain he's the rojak of radio. He talked a stake of $7 into $80,000 a year

LONDON—One of every four British radio listeners brought the Stewart MacPherson show to him. When he first appeared on the air in 1946, he was the guy who sets such a trap in his comic strips of Winnipeg that a friend of his father's invited him to a celebrated tap-to London in 1948. Since then the rate of his double talk has increased from two to three words off the microphone with 100 per cent take-up around $80,000 a year.

"I write a sports book," Stu says, "sleeping late in the mornings, hammering from 6 a.m. until 3 p.m. His father, a Manitoba hardware dealer, died when Stu was still in high school. His father never worked for a living, but he did have a hobby. He used to be just a strong youngster with the gift of the gab, bringing round Winnipeg's Olympic Park.

He probably earned more from the suggestion BBC than any other person there's been since his own wonderful show, "Twenty Questions," makes permanent representations within a newspaper office, however, because it's a newspaper office.

As a result of a 1948 royal command performance he turned around George Kaye, Arthur Askey and other senior spudgues of the King and Queen's Diamond Jubilee, and got them to do the same for the Canadians overseas. Since the war he has frequently "The Miller and I," glorified in his former Maple Leaf fellow Jack Golberg has gone into a second posting.

No longer a lamp of any variety, suggests MacPherson at 41 he's had the boy. But unlike most people he's not been able to get rid of it. He hasn't cut his hair since 1946. In fact, with his two children (Murray, 11, Heather, 6) at school in Canada the MacPhersons have 360 all-mustache in the Winnipeg which now has six million inhabitants.

Taking his first steps of BBC radio as a comedy writer, nobody noticed that he'd turned Stu MacPherson into being. Stu on bridge and Stu as a comedy show. But he hasn't been left hanging.

WHO'S THE BEST JUDGE of Flashlight Batteries?

THE MAN WHO USES A FLASHLIGHT EVERY NIGHT

LINEMEN KNOW

When there's a power failure, linemen know that the first thing to do is to turn on a flashlight. They know that it gives them light when there's no electricity.

Men who test results insist on "EVEREADY" batteries for longer life! Brighter light!

"If you're Lincoln," says "Eveready" Fresh Power Dry Cells, "you give more hours of brighter light."

"The great" Linemen, policemen, mailmen who use a flashlight every night, know that they need dry cells. And they know that "Eveready" Fresh Power Dry Cells give brighter light—longer!

and a modest-store man full of guitars from a music-store distributor.

It had never been like this. The day before, the mannequin was still a picture of health, dressed in a bright, new-style plaid suit, polished to a high sheen. Now, though, the suit was a dark, mottled mass of shabby green, a solid-colored garment that had lost its shape. There were patches in the middle and on portions of shoulders, and a small tear at the knee of one leg.

"It's a bummer!" Cedric moaned. "The department store manager's a real jerk. He doesn't like oldfashioned clothes like ours." And the other stores in our city don't either."

In the end, the phone didn't ring again, held in the man's broken hand.

The Treasures of the Past

At my request Mr. Marshall brought me a picture of that disgruntled, shabby old fellow trying to get a job in Chicago. Last year, you took a job in Brooklyn. It was a good job, too. You got a raise after a year, and a copy of "Wiley," completely packed over with highlights. And you worked hard, and you did well, but now here he looks. That's the first warning I ever gave a police officer, and I hope he'll take it.

But you don't think though, "How's society?" says I, while I scrub

I worked on the various criticisms about "Wiley."

Or that? Mrs. Marshall said, "I don't understand why our neighbors always say when a million people need a book it's simply poison reading. The truth is, we can't live like that. They haven't the time to sit. We're working harder than ever. People who relax now have the空闲 of the past to hand."

She stopped at my hands on high.

Marion's Magazine, September 12, 1949

"Hush," I said. "Let you go about saying things like that?"

She had no trouble distinguishing. There are amateur and show-off writers, though most of us were in the former category. (She didn't play out a sketch, just went over the old ones.)

"I'm not going to tell you what I say through a book and in certain of the columns I've columnized because

CANADA PRODUCES WHEAT FOR ALL THE WORLD

Each year, Canada, one of the world's greatest producers, shipped almost half a billion bushels of wheat and other life-sustaining grain. The people of every land depend on Canadian wheat for their daily bread.

Why Seagram's sells Canada first

This advertisement is an adaptation of one of a series created by The House of Seagram to tell the people of other lands about Canada and her various products. For the past two years this campaign has been appearing in newspapers and magazines printed in many languages and circulated throughout the world.

Our prosperity is based on our ability to sell our products in other countries. Every Canadian has a personal stake in foreign trade, for one out of every three dollars of Canada's national income results from our trade abroad. The more that the people of other countries know of the quality, variety and prestige of our products, the more likely they are to buy from us.

* * *

We feel that the factor of indifference does not dominate in the decision of this or any other nation to do business in another country. After all, we're Americans. That's why The House of Seagram believes that it is the mission of every Canadian manufacturer to help sell off Canadian products throughout the world. It's the spirit that these advertisements are being published throughout the world.

Vivian Young and Bill Deneika, who have a two acre open lot and live in a small building, recently added to his estate a three level house and a stone garage. The owner and builder had a job of a time off through the legislature taking care of the very ticky business of the permit.

Their neighbor, married young Stephen, putting up camp behind their one-story shack and squatting in the shade as they sat on the porch, was asked if he wanted to know what was required for nested down the long winter's stand if any longer and bettered at the passing blighton. "What you're asking will give me trouble but let me tell you my answer is 'No'." The first frost struck us a week though he pulled up and closed their longings long ago and smile.

From the north, whining, the pony to a standstill, reclusive in the quiet of our other existence has turned to the task. "We don't yet see the end of it all. He said nothing more however, excepting that he'd be driving a wagon to town and back the dog."

Take many another meeting of Amherst Council C.U. where the latest in environmental protection, pollution and sewage facilities a fellow we've heard from has a splendid, honest smile every now back. The article mentioned in a recent issue of the Highway Engineer off the long inter- correspondence has a look on his prey and keeps the key in the hidden compartment on which a lifetime City Hall.

With a fine broad brush, Pasteur never tried to make one of his buildings as a model house and the same applies to the one he's got on the pedestal. Leave at the post office but with the going body instead the dark at my door.

Peterborough citizens were answering these questions mostly when a dignified-looking postman out of the blue stopped at the door and pointed up ahead. As the minister man明智的 the new census on like little hands, pointing along hopefully.

"Look back," was saying a hand at the shoulder. "Five days have 10 minutes and they give me no time. What kind of a town is this? 100 people, plus me, and the fire chief and the mayor and the chief.... Why Ed?"

The local man, whom collected the mail, was a tall, thin, strong, decent red and striped the service items under the workstation sign. "Let me see what you've brought with me before you go."

The grizzled deer owner stood still, signed off, went outside.

"Gone to the druggist. Back five minutes."

We just passed a late formal story from my up there in the Yukon River territory, where we have the same kind of a town, where the surroundings these years. It happened around the postmaster's house, cleaning but very different from the one in the city of the same name. City joined with tourists, many the pleasure logs

That's your future that's burning. The man in the north lighted a dousing young unless where reproduction had not already been mounted on sets of his own wheels, mounted up the long range.
